

Moonlight: Brand Advertising & Event Campaign

“Reflect What is Hidden”

Chavangkorn Kanjanakuldit (Ken) 6681371 - ICCD322 Integrated Branding

Concept & Idea

The Core Concept: The "Sage Rebel" archetype. In an era of digital surveillance, data mining, and constant oversharing, true freedom is found in complete analog privacy.

The Idea: To position Moonlight as a physical sanctuary for the unfiltered mind. We utilize spectral ink and shorthand as a form of "analog encryption," proving that privacy isn't just about cybersecurity—it is a tactile, highly personal practice for the modern thinker.

Self-Evaluation

Clear

Both posters successfully communicate one unified message: Analog is the only space left for true, unfiltered thought. Whether it's a private journal entry or a gallery exhibition, the message is that your inner world deserves to be protected.

Design

Features a high-contrast (chiaroscuro) lighting style representing the Moonlight name. It strictly rejects modern digital fonts, pairing elegant cursive with casual handwriting to reinforce a purely analog, human-centric identity.

Creativity

The campaign subverts standard "privacy" marketing (which usually relies on tech/cybersecurity tropes) by taking an analog approach. I incorporated actual Gregg shorthand to serve as an encrypted background texture, grounding the concept in a real, functional cipher system.

Consistency

Consistency of Brand Personality & Value: The brand archetype is the "Sage Rebel." Both the ad and the event poster maintain a moody, intellectual tone. They frame darkness not as something to fear, but as a premium, quiet sanctuary for the privacy-conscious writer.
